Why she's an action figure:

Dr. Lorrie Klein helps women every day through her work. She educates women on how to take care of their skin, protect it from damage and how to make it look its best. "A woman's self esteem is tied closely to how she looks and her skin is the part of her body she shows the world," Dr. Klein explains. "Whether its pimples, brown spots or wrinkles, women are often distressed by these imperfections. I try to point out the good features of my patients' faces, such as if they have beautiful eyes or lips, rather than focusing on the flaws. But I can make many of these flaws disappear or improve them with the treatments I perform. I try to help women accept themselves for who they are while giving them a little tune up."

Making a big difference:

Dr. Klein helps her community by donating to many of the local charities and schools. Gift certificates to her spa, Euro Day Spa are frequently requested for these charity events. Her office also participates in free skin cancer screenings, where her certified physician assistants Nancy Koehler and Linda Rank assist her in screening more than 50 people at each of these events.

Dr. Klein has won several awards and has published several articles in medical journals. She has lectured to other physicians at medical conferences and at numerous community and civic organizations.
